Soft Skills

Suggested timeframe of completion: Beginning of School Year- October 1

Soft Skills Intro

While employers look for candidates with skills and training needed to perform a specific job (hard skills), they're also interested in hiring employees who have developed soft skills that are important to getting work completed in a team environment. Hard skills might be things like: knowing HTML for coding, taking and recording a patient's vital signs, or completing a lab test. Soft skills are interpersonal, or people skills. They often include communication and listening abilities, as well as empathy and work ethic.

Check out this video series to learn more about soft skills.

	List 3-5 soft skills that you did not know about before watching the video(s).
1
2
3
4
5

Why do you think some employers value soft skills over hard and technical skills, or consider them as important?

Mark As Complete

No